

The 6 most common security nightmares for small businesses

Times are great for small businesses.

But not when you've an endless stream of security tasks to tackle. And you start to face up to scenarios that are more like bad dreams...

1. Being exposed

You find there's nothing to protect you. Your business is under threat from cyber threats, 24x7. And you don't have the time, resources, or skills in-house to do anything about it.

2. Drowning

You're sinking in a sea of different devices. Thanks to bring your own device (BYOD) policies, some are ones you've never seen before, and never want to see again. So how will you manage to keep them all secure?

21% of organisations have traced a data breach to their BYOD program<sup>1</sup>

3. Being left behind

There's one device that holds all the company's confidential information. Left in a train carriage, just waiting for someone to find it. Looks like you'll be front page news tomorrow.

In London, more than 24,000 devices were left on public transport in a single year<sup>2</sup>

4. Unseen threats

You're putting a presentation together in a café, when you feel the hairs on the back of your neck rising. Someone's spying on what you're doing. And you're conscious they're still there, in the shadows, even when you leave.

5. Running around aimlessly

In just minutes, you'll need to have tracked down all those sales people, and updated their customer data and devices with the latest security patches. But where are they all?

Most companies take an average of 100-120 days to patch vulnerabilities<sup>3</sup>

6. Being in places you don't know

Some colleagues are in the office. Some on the road. And some work together in strange places that no-one else ever visits. But somehow, you've got to manage and control what they're doing.
